HIGH TREASON.

DEATH SENTENCE STILL THE PENALTY.

[BY A BARRISTER IN THE "DAILY CHRONICLE".]

It should not be forgotten that any misguided citizen of the United Kingdom who may raise the standard of rebellion in these critical days is liable to be tried for high treason, and, if convicted, to suffer the penalty of the hangman's rope.

The offence is one of the four set out in the unrepented part of Edward III's Treasons Act of 1351:

"If a man do levy war against our Lord the King in his realm; or
"Be adherent to the King's enemies in his realm, giving to them aid and comfort in the realm or elsewhere."
And thereof be proved by attainted of open deed (i.e. de coe not attainted de coe facto).

This provision is sufficiently wide to embrace any disaffected persons who seek to upset the authority of the Crown by force of arms if the authorities think fit to give them a public trial. Alternatively they could be arraigned for treason-felony under the Act of 1849, which makes it a felony:

(1) To levy war against the King in any part of the United Kingdom in order by force or constraint to charge his measures or counsels or to put force or constraint on or to intimidate or overawe either or both Houses of Parliament.

(2) To move or stir any foreigner with force to invade the United Kingdom or any of the King's Dominions.

One of its purposes, of course, was to provide a via media between the capital sentence and an acquittal by a compassionate jury in cases where the accused were obviously the tools of clever conspirators.

For treason-felony a judge would formerly order transportation or penal servitude for life, but the death sentence was reserved for high treason.

Though the facts proved at the trial amount in law to treason, a person can be convicted of felony under this Act and he cannot afterwards be prosecuted for treason on the same facts.

On a trial for the less heinous offence the oath of "two lawful and credible witnesses" are not essential to conviction as they are in treason trials, which, before that salutary reform were often decided without any independent evidence.

Most trials of this nature since 1914 have proceeded under the Treason-Felony Act, the notable exception being that of Colonel Lynch in 1908. Boldly returning to England after actively taking up the cause of the "Boers," he was arraigned under the general Treason Act of Henry VIII. (1535) and sentenced to death, but spared by the exercise of the King's prerogative of mercy.

The then Lord Chief Justice, Lord Alverstone, declared at this trial "that if a subject in time of war joined the King's enemies for whatever purpose, that was an act of treason." The sentence was commuted to penal servitude for life, and after being released on licence Colonel Lynch received a Royal pardon in 1907.

This case also established that the Statute of Treasons applies to acts committed both within and without the realm, and that a British subject who attempts to become naturalised in an enemy's country in war time is guilty of high treason.

Identical with that of the English courts in the course of the nineteenth century. But before 1854 Ireland had different laws, notably the "Whiteboy Acts," giving special powers to the Executive for dealing with risings. In 1848 William Smith O'Brien was tried for high treason after his rising in Ireland, and was condemned to death, but the sentence was commuted to transportation.

The subsequent Fenian trials in the main, proceeded on indictments for treason-felony.

The last executions in this country for high treason were in 1812 and 1820. In the former year W. Cundell, alias Connell, and John Smith were hanged and beheaded in Horseferry-lane after being captured in the enemy's service in France. Their counsel was afterwards Lord Brougham, the famous statesman.

In the other case the five Odo-street conspirators were executed as traitors for planning the assassination of Cabinet Ministers.

To mark the enormity of the crime the punishment was carried out in olden days with every circumstance indicative of disgrace. The hapless offender was condemned to be hanged, but to be disembowelled while still alive, and his body to be quartered, and it was the former custom to fix the heads of the criminals on pikes at the gates of London as a lesson to others.

In 1790 hanging was substituted for burning in the case of women practised for treason, and in 1870 the practice of drawing, beheading and quartering, long since fallen into disuse, was abolished by law. But by Royal Warrant a condemned traitor may even now be beheaded.

That the authorities have contemplated the revival of trials for high treason in the unfortunate event of an occasion arising in the country's crisis was evinced by the issue of a Proclamation in the first week of the war. This notified that:

British subjects contributing to a Loan raised on behalf of the German Government will be guilty of High Treason as adhering to the King's enemies.

But, of course, trials for treason or treason-felony are by no means the only process by which the Executive can make an example of any disorderly spirits who may endeavour to bring some ray of comfort to the sorely tried Central Empire.

The rule of military law can be declared at any moment, and the offenders be brought before courts-martial instead of the civil tribunals.

In this connection it may be noted that Regulation 50 under the Defence of the Realm Act provides that "if any person does any act of such a nature as to be calculated to be prejudicial to the public safety or the defence of the Realm and not specifically provided for in the foregoing Regulations, with the intention or for the purpose of assisting the enemy, he shall be deemed to be guilty of an offence against these regulations."

The maximum sentence under the Defence of the Realm Act, however, is penal servitude for life.

London, June 18.
The fire on the Clan Ross has been kept under control. Immense damage has been caused.

A TOUCH of rheumatism, of a twinge of neuralgia, whatever the trouble is, Chamberlain's Pain Palm drives away the pain at once and cures the complaint quickly. First application gives relief. When a bottle of it is kept in the household the pain of burns and scalds may be promptly relieved, cuts and bruises quickly healed and swellings promptly reduced. It is fast to the household. It is safe, sure, embrocation at every sorely aching point. It is the only remedy for all Chills and Stomach Troubles.

ROYAL DOCKYARD FOR WOODS.

"THE STRAITS DOLLAR."

In their weekly bulletin, report dated 10th March, Messrs. Samuel Montagu and Co., Ltd., state: "Should the price of silver exceed £16 it would begin to be worth while to ship to Europe; and there seems the probability that the Straits dollar as stock of the former coin will be sent to the United States Mint prior to 1910." The value of $750,000,000 rupees, nominally worth £18,750,000,000. The amount of Straits dollars needed to equal £1,000,000,000 is 1,000,000,000 Straits dollars. The price of this currency has reduced from 30 shillings to 31s trading at present. On the rise in the price of silver, the Government are likely to have to advance in the face of a heavy call for gold.

CHILDREN

DURING the summer months mothers should watch for any unnatural looseness of the child's bowels. When a prompt attention at this time is not proper, say a violent Cholera infantum Colic, the first aid is diarrhoea, which can be brought on by giving a little Calomel and Sorel's.

HONGKONG TIDES.

The tide-table given below has been compiled at the Nautical Almanac Office in London from the results of the analysis of observations taken by means of an automatic tide-recording machine in the Water Police Basin at Tsim Sha Tsui during the years 1887-9.
The zero of the table corresponds with the zero of the sounding in the Admiralty Chart, which has been found to be a foot 3 inches below mean sea level.
To obtain the depth of water on the tide gauge at the Victoria Naval Yard add 3 feet 4 inches, and on the gauge at Lamont Dock, Aberdeen, add 10 feet 4 inches to the height given in the table.

Table with 4 columns: Date, High Water, Low Water, and Range. Rows for June 21st to 27th, 1916.
